Puff

a picture book painted in PostScript

Puff was a little cloud.

She was the smallest cloud in the whole big sky.

The big clouds rumbled and rolled, and when they rained, the whole land drank.

"I want to rain too!" said Puff.

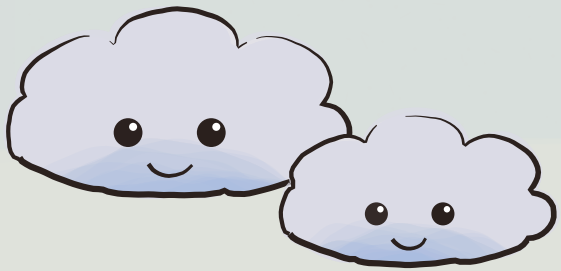

"You?" rumbled the big clouds.

Too small. Too small.

Off they rolled to the far mountains.

The sun grew hot.

Puff puffed and puffed,
but she could not keep up.

Down in a dry field stood one little seedling. Its leaves hung down.

"Water," it whispered.

"Please."

Puff was the only cloud in the sky.

Then she looked at the seedling. It was even smaller than she was.

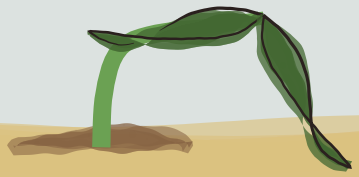

"Too small or not,"
said Puff, "I'll try."
She squeezed.

Plip.

Plip.

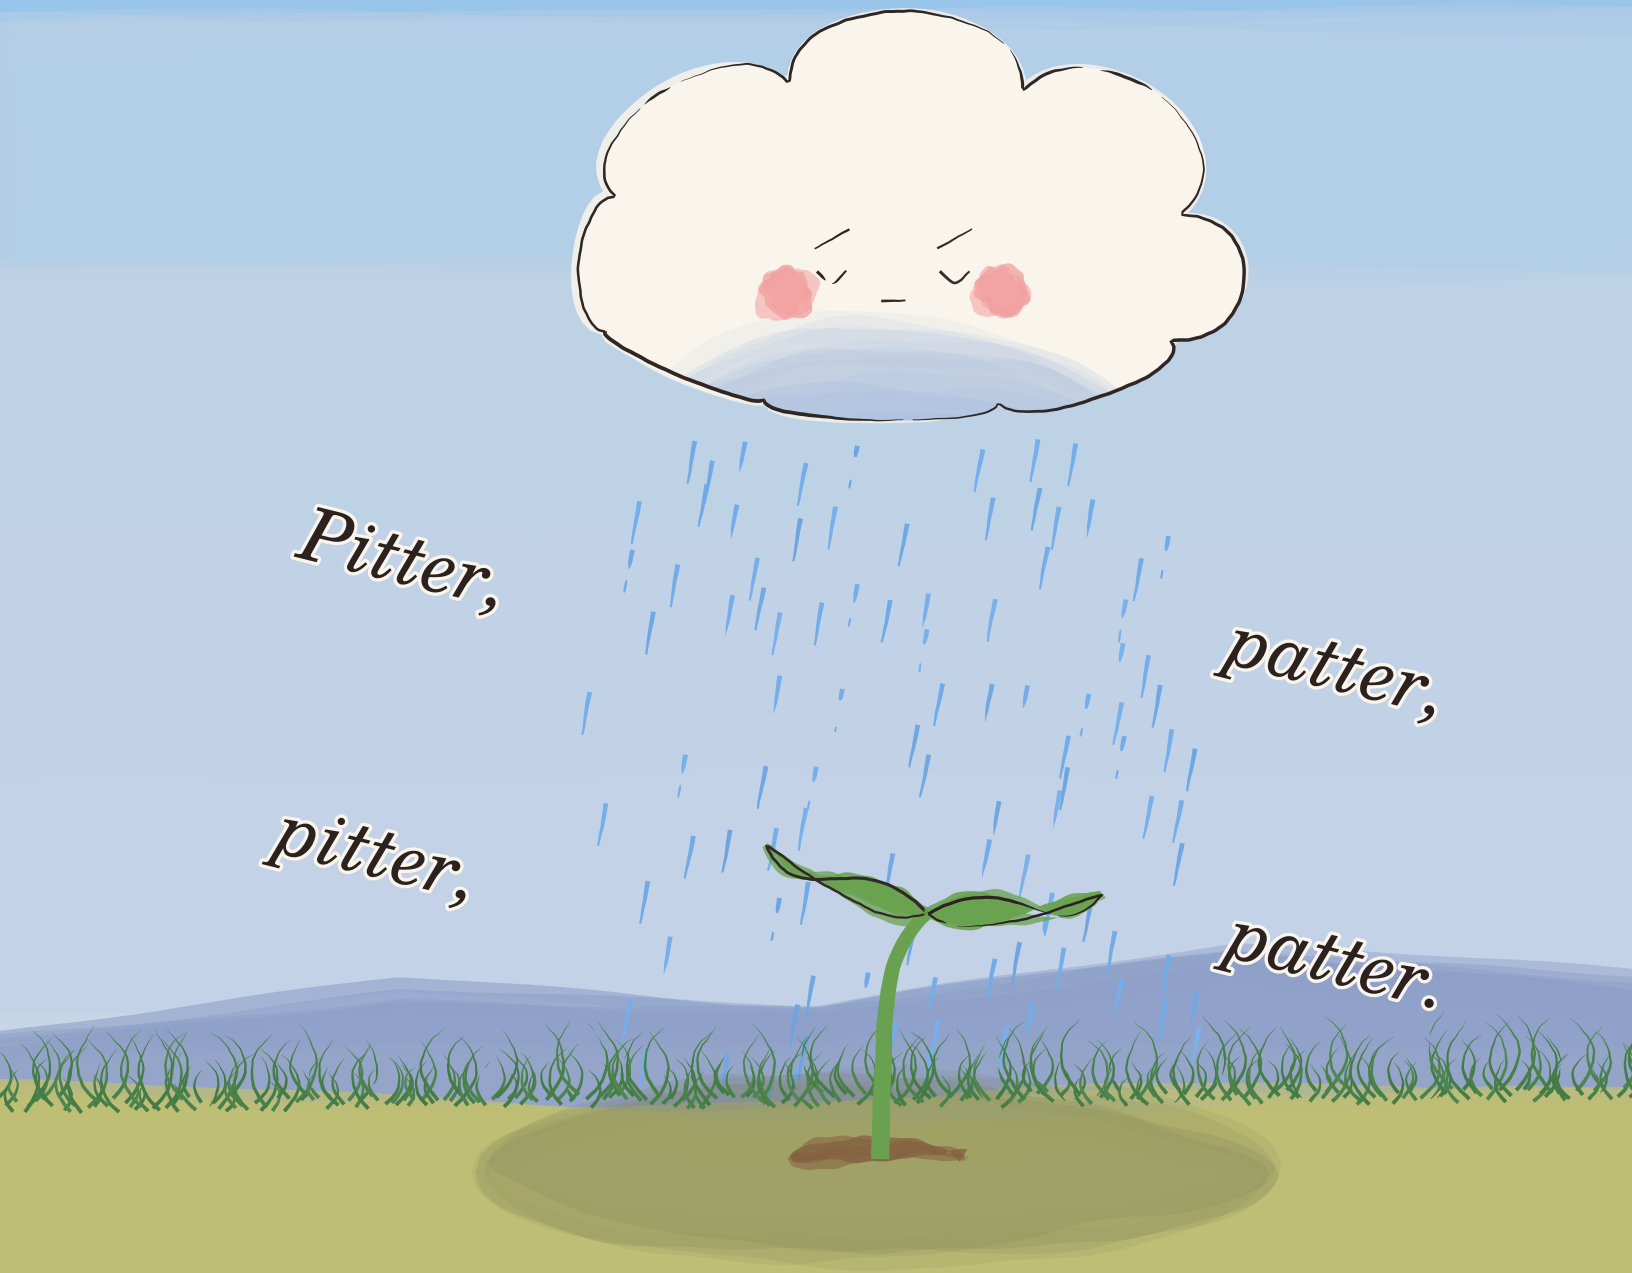

Plip.

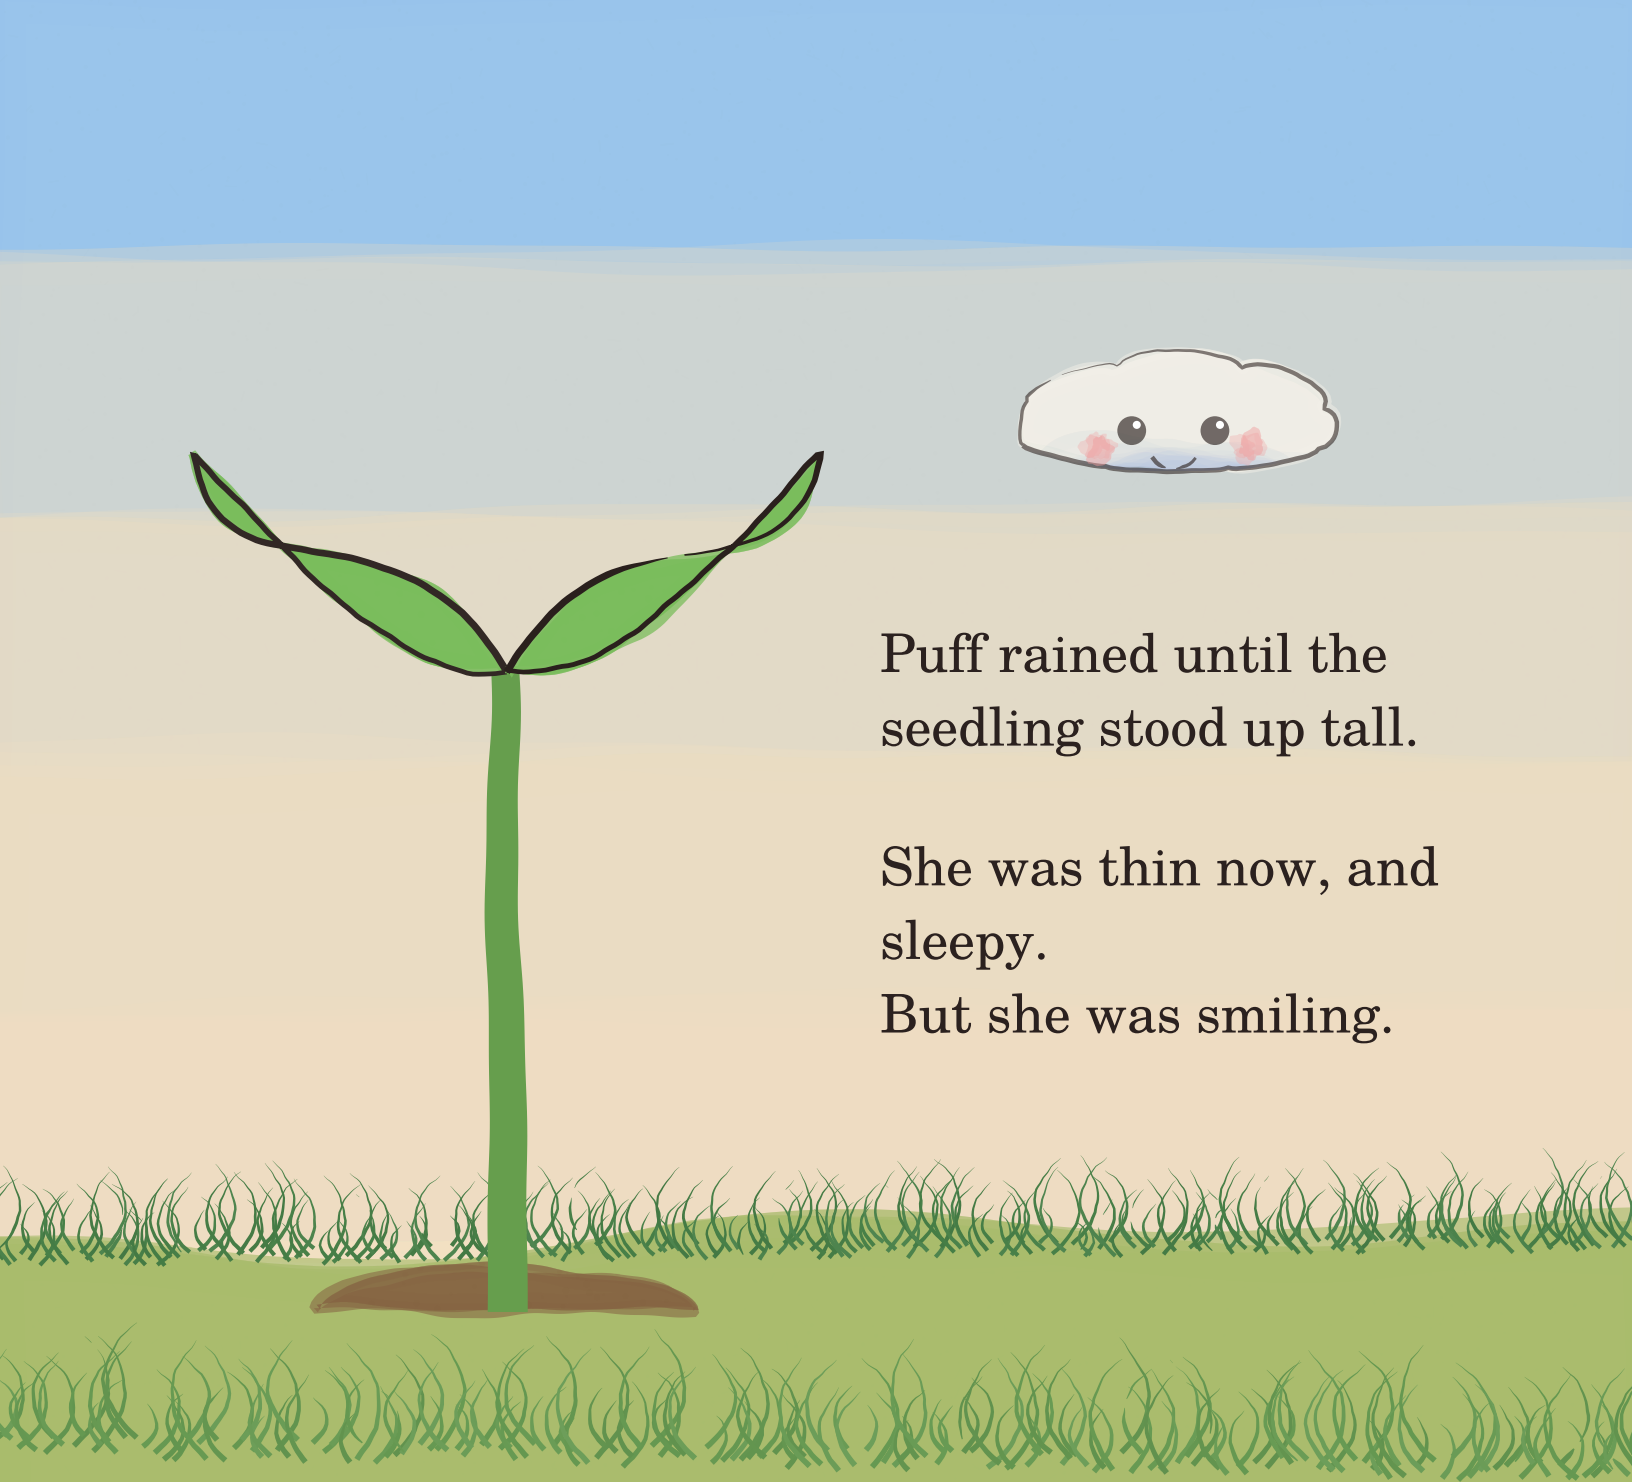

And one little leaf lifted up.

“It helped!” said Puff.

So she squeezed harder.

Puff rained until the seedling stood up tall.

She was thin now, and sleepy.
But she was smiling.

That night, Puff rested over the wet field.

In the morning, soft mist rose and Puff drank it in.

up,

The water she gave had come back to her.

up,

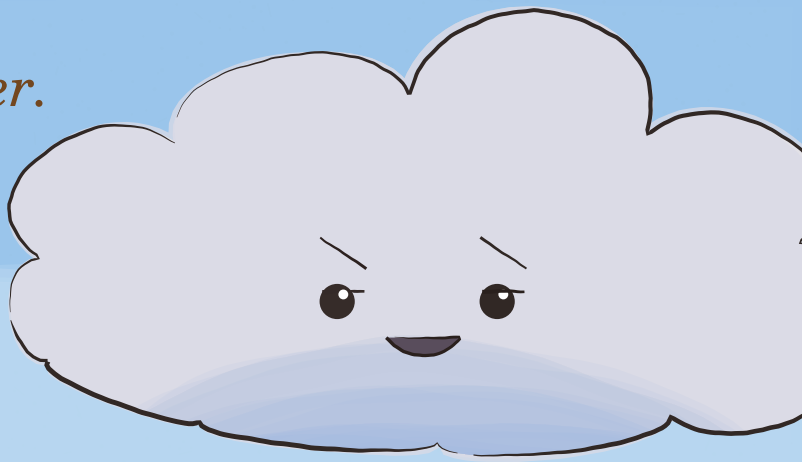

up,

Puff was round again!

Weeks went by. The big clouds came rolling home.

"Puff did," said the sunflower.

Puff? Too small. Too small.

"Not too small,"

said the sunflower.

"Just right."

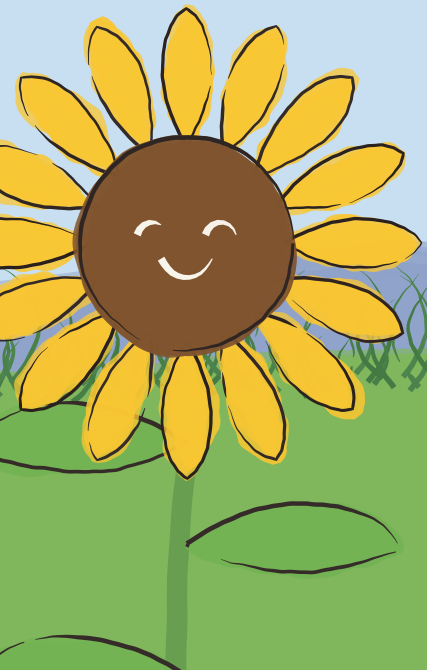

"We were wrong," rumbled the big clouds. "Sorry, Puff."

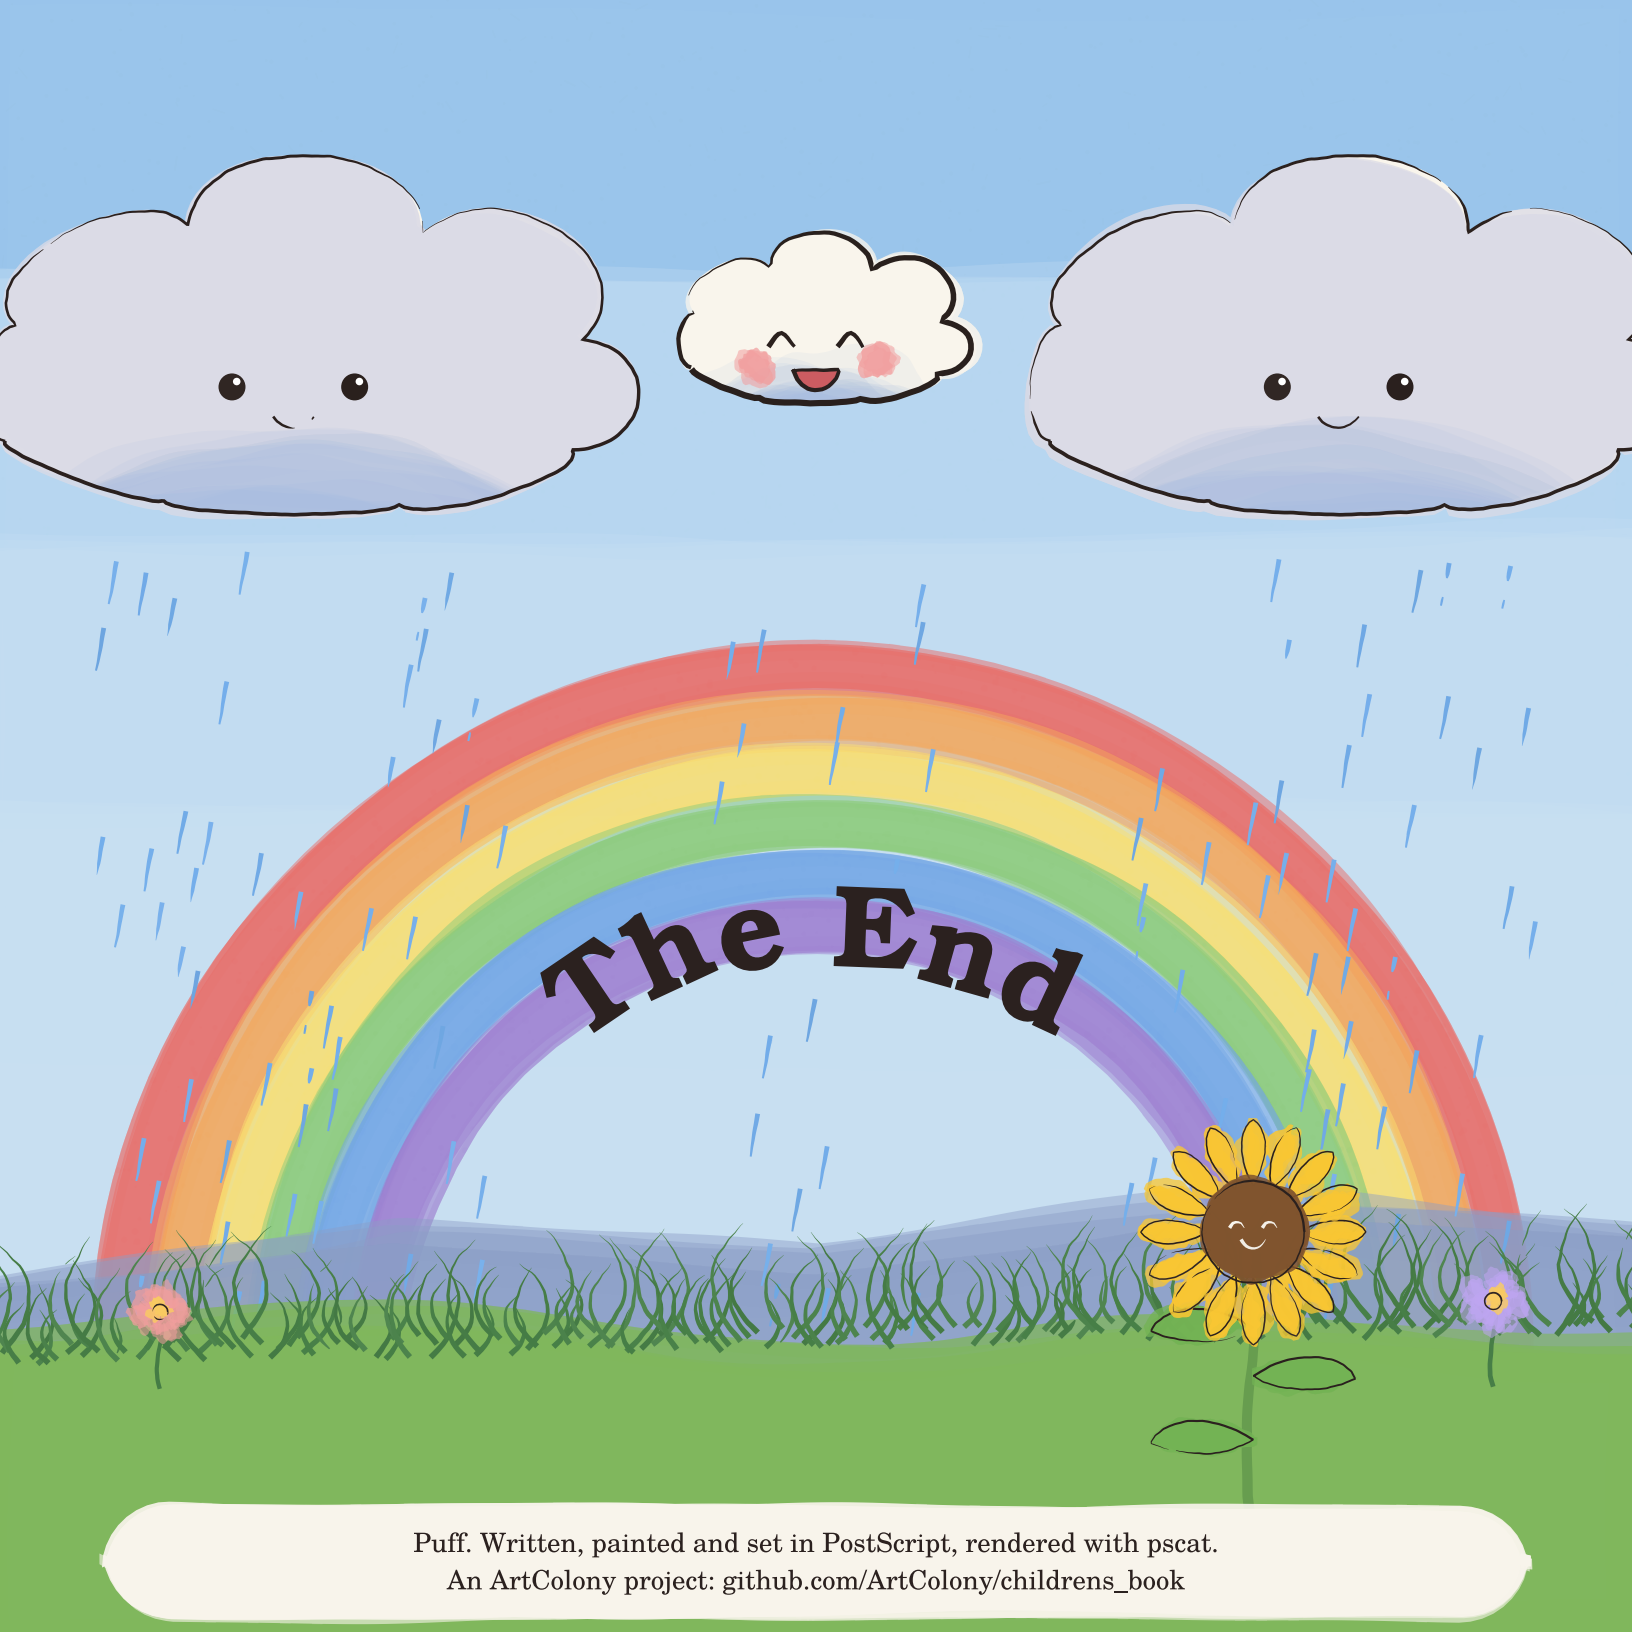

No one is too small to help.

"Come and rain with us!"

And they made room for her, right in the middle.

Puff. Written, painted and set in PostScript, rendered with pscat.
An ArtColony project: github.com/ArtColony/childrens_book